Chief Wild Feather Gets A Free Ride

The speck in the distance grew larger and larger. Hank Riley, station master of the Pony Express at Rodger's Bluff, could afford the luxury of a smile. His best rider, Burt Willis, was on time and the mail would go through. He yelled an order to the relay rider. "Git on your horse pronto." No further words were needed, for Jim Keety as he swung into his saddle.

The fast half-breed California mustang carrying Burt stopped in front of the hitching post at the station. A thin lanky man wearing a stained buckskin suit slid off the saddle. Then he handed his sack of mail to his relief rider with but one comment. "Chief Wild Feather is on the warpath. His men are covering the territory from Fort Benton to Carson's Sink. So ride like the blazes."

Finished with this bit of advice Burt entered the station and slumped into the frontier's version of an easy chair which was thick with cut buffalo robes. He stroked the stubble of a beard on his face and then remarked to his boss and friend, "Don't know which to do first. Get some rest or eat."

"Better eat first. Got some bacon in on the last freighter and believe it or not, Pancho actually managed to find some fresh eggs. Kept them for you." Then Hank Riley shouted at the top of his voice. "Pancho, some grub for Mr. Willis. And pronto. Don't burn the bacon this time."

Burt stretched his legs while waiting for the food to come to the table. "You know this is my last run," he confided to his friend. "Got enough money to take up the option on my land in the territory. Going to build a ranch. Believe me I am grateful to Mr. Alexander Major for paying us such high wages as pony express riders. One hundred and fifty dollars a month with a bonus thrown in amounts to something at the end of the year. Especially if you don't spend it."

Hank Riley hesitated a minute before he spoke. When it comes to matters of the heart even a rough westerner knew that tact was the order of the day. The only trouble was that he didn't know how to be tactful so he came right to the point. "What about Ruth Wallace? Is she going to be your wife or not? That gal has no right to break your heart."

Burt Willis was conscious of his Adam's apple as he began to speak. The words just didn't come so easy across his lips. "Ruth is a fine girl. Make any man a good wife. Haven't seen her for a month. She was with her uncle at Fort Benton. Seems she gave her word to another man. Won't tell me who he is. I know she loves me but she's going to marry this other fellow because to her a word of honor is sacred. Guess I better forget her."

"The food she get cold if you no hurry to table," announced Pancho who acted as chef, assistant station master, and general helper at the pony express station. Burt went over to the table and in ten minutes the dishes were clean. "I'm going up to my room and get some shut eye. Tell Pancho to wake me before the stage coach leaves for the Fort."

After a dozen hours of sleep a refreshed Burt Willis stood outside of the express station. The coach was almost ready to leave and Hank Riley was giving final orders to the driver. "You'll have to drive straight through with your team of mules. Word came in last night that the Indians raided the station at Howard's Crossing. Ran off all the stock and killed Tom Harrigan."

The last passenger about to enter the coach turned to the station master. "I would like to send a pony express letter to someone in Johnson City. How much would it cost?"

Hank shook his head in the negative. "Sorry. You couldn't send a letter there for any amount of money. No run to Johnson City. Chief Wild Feather and his Braves got my last three men. And they have even been attacking Johnson City."

RANGE BUSTERS

The man who made the request was dressed in the latest eastern fashion wearing trousers and a tailor-made coat. He spoke to Burt. "This letter is very important. It's for a girl and she has to get it before tomorrow. Her entire happiness depends on what is in this letter. I'll give you a hundred dollars in gold to deliver that letter."

Burt laughed. "You're not giving me gold to deliver a letter. You'd be paying me to present my scalp to the Indians. No, mister, I don't think any girl is worth while risking your neck for when Indians are on the warpath."

The young man was not going to be put off so easily. "I'll double that amount if you'll get the message through. It's the least I can do for Ruth Wallace. She's with her uncle who was transferred from Fort Benton to Johnson. Who knows? They may be fighting the Indians at this very minute."

"I'll deliver that letter for you," replied Burt. "And your gold is most welcome. Help me get some stock for my ranch." The stranger opened a large purse and counted out the gold pieces. Then he climbed into the stage and waved his hand as the fleet footed mules started on their journey.

Burt returned to the inside of the station followed by his friend. "You're just plain loco," asserted Hank. "You can't get through with that letter. And I haven't even got a spare horse to give you. You'll have to ride the same horse right through. All that's available is the black-tan pony."

There were no words in reply. Burt went over to the gun and ammunition box. He opened the top of the chest. "I'm going to take two Colts with me," he announced. "And I'll carry four spare cylinders. I have my repeating rifle. That will give me 36 pistol shots and 7 in the rifle. Should be able to handle any situation."

Ten minutes later Burt was in the saddle. The letter which had been already wrapped in a protective covering of oiled silk was inside his buckskin jacket. "Ride like the blazes. Like the blazes" were the farewell words of Hank to his friend. "And make every shot count."

The first fifteen miles of the run were over straight prairie land. As the swift pony carried its rider along the edge of the river, four mounted Indians began to chase him. He heard a shot whiz past his ear. He held the reins with his left hand and began to fire with his right hand. One Indian went down and then a second. The other two stopped. Onward went the pony and his rider.

As the pony approached the forest of aspen trees Burt checked the speed of his mount. A trail had been cut through the previous year. He dropped his bridle reins on the neck of his horse and in his left hand, held his rifle at full cock. Slowly he went through the trail. He heard a slight rustle overhead and fired once. An Indian tumbled to the ground. Then a second later a human body fell upon him. It was an Indian in full war dress with a scalping knife.

"Me kill you," shouted the Brave as both men tumbled to the ground. Burt had dropped his rifle and was unable to get his Colt out of the holster. He bent the wrist of the Indian backwards until the knife fell to the ground. Then with the crook of his elbow he delivered a smashing blow to the chin of the Redskin. In front of him was the unconscious body of the man who had wanted his scalp.

"Must be a pretty important fellow with all those feathers," said Burt half aloud to himself. "Seems to me I ought to tie him up and carry him with me as sort of protection." He found his horse and with rawhide made an efficient job of turning the Indian into a package.

The extra weight made it impossible for the pony to continue at full speed. When they came out of the forest a bullet struck Burt in the side. He went for his Colt and fired every chamber. A shriek told him he had finished off his attacker.

Four hours later the startled citizens of Johnson City saw a strange sight. A pony carrying its half conscious bleeding rider with a tied Indian across the saddle. Burt remembered his last words as friendly hands helped him down. "Got a letter for Miss Wallace. Deliver it. . . ."

When he opened his eyes he was in a nice clean bed. And looking straight at him were a familiar group of people including Ruth Wallace. "Don't you say a word," she said putting her finger to her lips. "Listen carefully. You're the hero of the territory. The Indian you brought in happens to be Chief Wild Feather. As for the letter it came from the man I promised to marry. He has released me from my promise and is going back East. Now get some more rest . . . my darling hero."

—Harold Gluck

COWBOY HATS

THE TEN GALLON HAT IS THE HALLMARK OF A COWBOY!

MODERN RODRO COWBOYS WEAR DISTINCTIVE HATS, EACH INDIVIDUALLY SHAPED.

THE WIDE BRIM ACTS AS A SUNSHIELD. THE LARGE CROWN ALLOWS FOR PLENTY OF AIR SO THE COWBOY'S HEAD DOESN'T GET TOO HOT. IN AN EMERGENCY THE HAT COULD BE USED AS A WATER PAIL.

BUT MOST DESERT COWBOYS PREFER A CHEAP 98¢ STRAW. FIRST THE HAT IS SOAKED IN A HORSE TROUGH TO BREAK DOWN THE ORIGINAL BLOCKING.

WHILE STILL WET THE HAT IS MOLED WITH EXTRA RIDGES TO GIVE IT PROPER DASH!

YER GOIN' TER BE A REGULAR DUDE, LEM!

TIED AROUND WITH A BELT, THE HAT IS THEN LEFT IN THE OPEN FOR THE SUN AND WIND TO DRY AND MOLD IT.

A FEW FINISHING TOUCHES AND THE HAT IS READY FOR WEAR. THE OWNER IS "RIGHT PROUD" OF HIS OWN CREATION.

DON'T WAIT UNTIL IT'S TOO LATE

While there is something new under the sun almost every day, Beauticians, Expert Hairdressers and Dermatologists are all familiar with the use of LANOLIN. In recent years, it has been believed that CHOLESTEROL is the active ingredient of LANOLIN. CHOLESTEROL is an ingredient found in all vegetables, in all animals, and in our own bodies. It is now possible for chemists to produce a synthetic CHOLESTEROL, which makes it possible to use CHOLESTEROL in this Special Hair and Scalp System. Your hair grows from the follicles located in the tissues of your scalp. The condition of your hair depends upon the normal health of your scalp. The LANOLIN Cream Shampoo which you receive with this treatment is to be used as a Shampoo to cleanse the hair and scalp of dust, dried perspiration, grime, etc.

YOU GET EVERYTHING, the JAR of JUELENE SYSTEM (SCALP and HAIR LUBRICANT), the LANOLIN CREAM SHAMPOO, the DH-12 FORMULA containing CHOLESTEROL, PLUS the SPECIAL LANOLIN COMPOUND, ALL A REAL BARGAIN AT $4.60 BUT all YOU PAY is ONLY $2.98, plus postage, FOR EVERYTHING. FOLLOW the JUELENE SYSTEM DIRECTIONS you receive with your package OF THESE 4 FORMULAS, and YOU WILL BLESS THE DAY YOU BEGAN and TRIED THIS PROPER WAY.
